"How long does it take you to do up a white vest?"
Said the laundryman.
"Bout two washings."
You're up against a different proposition when it's a MacCarthy - Evans White Washcoat. So is the laundryman.

All our white wash vests are soap-boiled and shrunk before we touch 'em with scissors. They can't shrink. They won't rust.

And by the way, MacCarthy - Evans 3-Button Washcoat - White Dress Waistcoats are "in" for function wear.

IRON LIQUIDATION IS DISQUIETING.

Overcapitalization of the United States Steel Corporation Is Cause of Reduction.

WALL STREET IS INTERESTED.

President's Policy of Recognizing New Panama Republic Receives Little Attention in Financial World.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

New York, Nov. 8.—In connection with the iron and steel industry, Wall street and, for that matter, the entire community, is deeply grounded in two convictions. One is that this metal of wonderful utility is the backbone of all trade and that advances and declines in the raw product or finished commodity, set forth with the same accuracy as an aneroid instrument the elevation or depression, the adversity or prosperity, the storms or fair weather of general business. The other, set forth originally in epigrammatic style by Andrew Carnegie, is that iron and steel must be either king or pauper, which, according to the common acceptance of this figure of speech, is only another way of saying that the industry is either highly prosperous or severely depressed.

It is unfortunate, perhaps, that the community places a literal interpretation upon these generalizations. A barometer, for instance, requires adjustment at the hydrographic office or else from time to time to time to correct errors. On occasions the readings of the glass are confused by "pumping" or gusty winds and show a condition which is not a true index of atmospheric pressure or impending meteorological change.

LIQUIDATION DISQUIETING.

No doubt the resumption of liquidation in United States Steel Corporation securities is disquieting to many of the small holders, among the $5,000 or $10,000 of those who consider themselves partners with Mr. Morgan and Mr. Carnegie in enterprise. But the case is by no means hopeless, for all that readjustment of prices must come in every form of finished iron and steel. The bill is the unit of value in the steel industry, and the cut in price there will determine the price elsewhere.

Those foolish persons in Wall street who took the total output of billets by tons and multiplied it by $4 to determine the loss in earnings are in error. A proper basis for computation does not exist, for the corporation mines and cokes and manufactures and transports and buys and sells among its constituent plants. Added profits in one direction may compensate for loss elsewhere.

The net reaction in earnings, if the figure could ever be reached, will be distributed over the entire ultimate output, not to billets alone. For instance, if rails can be maintained at $28, while billets are reduced from $27 to $23, there is an apparent increased profit on rails of $4 a ton. Few persons, of course, believe that rails can be maintained in price, now that billets have been cut, and any railroad official placing orders at the old figures when the raw product is reduced would not be a proper subject for investigation.

WALL STREET VIEW.

In considering the decline in the price of steel products and the steel securities, it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that Wall street is viewing the subject more from the standpoint of the market than anything else. Of course, this is unavoidable, in view of the fact that the modern industrial trust is capitalized on the basis of earnings and not on the value of the plants.

In the case of the United States Steel Corporation the capitalization was swelled over the enormous proportions by taking over the constituent companies, which in themselves were overcapitalized, that a comparatively slight reduction per ton in the value of the raw product, accompanied by compensating reductions in labor and manufacture, will work serious losses.

If the question of disproportionate capitalization did not enter so largely into the consideration of the market, there would have been little occasion for serious apprehension over a reduction of $4 a ton in steel prices. It may be understood, practically, with the gathering of the Senators and Representatives at Washington. That the decline might be taken as an evidence of business contraction in iron and steel, but not for the reason that it is not regarded as a foreboding serious difficulty.

SPECIAL SESSION.

The special session of Congress probably will continue directly to the subject of treaties, but the fact ought not to be overlooked in Wall street that the industrial capitalization of the country, practically, with the gathering of the Senators and Representatives at Washington. That the decline might be taken as an evidence of business contraction in iron and steel, but not for the reason that it is not regarded as a foreboding serious difficulty.

The President's policy in respect to the recognition of the new Republic has received very little attention in the financial district. It may be understood, practically, with the gathering of the Senators and Representatives at Washington. That the decline might be taken as an evidence of business contraction in iron and steel, but not for the reason that it is not regarded as a foreboding serious difficulty.

Mr. Roosevelt has assumed the responsibility of a Central American policy that may yet involve the United States in a great deal of trouble. It is unnecessary at this time to dwell upon the complications which may present themselves, arising from the incident, but it is a feature which will assuredly play a part in the presidential campaign are not of a character wholly reassuring to Wall street.

One favorable feature should not be overlooked, and that is that the price of industrial securities, which will bear the chief burden of political assault, are at a level, which discounts much of bad news, and that general business, which generally halts in presidential years, is already easing down.

WOMAN WANTED TO SMOKE.

Patient Refused to Leave Almshouse for Elegant Home.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Macon, Mo., Nov. 8.—A wealthy woman of strong philanthropic tendencies visited the county almshouse this week and conversed with several of the unfortunate inmates. Among those she met was "Grandma Frankie" Westmoreland, 70 years old. Grandma Frankie always attracts attention because of her bright, apt manner and sociability, despite her great physical infirmities—she is totally blind.

The visitor resolved to make the aged woman happy the remainder of her days. She offered to take Grandma Frankie to her comfortable home and treat her as a revered member of the family. She went on and described the comforts the patient would enjoy—soft carpets to walk on instead of hard floors, a downy bed and pleasant room all her own, special attention, but she wanted to look after her wants.

Superintendent W. A. Patrick told her he knew the woman well, and she meant just what she said. Grandma Frankie pondered seriously. She knew it was a generous offer, but she wanted to understand something first.

"Why—why, Grandma," she said, "I don't know what you mean, you know."

"Don't, eh? Well, this one, Guess I ain't your friend, but I reckon I'll abide where I'm at."

PANAMA HAS LONG BEEN A COUNTRY APART FROM UNION.

Officers Often Illiterate and Organization of the Loosest in the Army, in Which Children of Eight and Ten Years Carry Guns and Unromantic Vivandieres Constitute the Commissary Department.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

New York, Nov. 8.—Military titles carry far less prestige in Colombia than they do in any other country north of the tropics.

A soldier there is not necessarily a strapping fellow in a fine uniform. He is merely a person able to carry a gun.

An officer may lack absolutely the training deemed essential in the North, and he may be entirely illiterate, for "book learning" is not required in the sort of fighting that usually falls to his lot.

Colombia's army seems formidable in numbers on paper, for it consists of all citizens for whom there can be found weapons of offense and defense. The one mistake usually made is in believing that the constant struggles which have occurred in the Republic there is no real fighting. If the highest type of patriotism consists of going into the field and laying down one's life for one's country, Colombian soldiers are truly patriotic.

In one great battle in the last revolution 17,000 lives were sacrificed, including that of the Federal commander, General Pinzola, whose troops finally vanquished the revolutionists under Uribe-Uribe.

There are few battles, however, are scarce in revolutionary periods in South America. There are few sieges and internal warfare may be protracted for years, with an enormous loss of life in the aggregate, without having any encounters of sufficient magnitude to attract much attention in the outside world. The soldiers do fight, however, and they soon adapt themselves to the life at the camp or the barracks, and when it comes to fighting they seem to know no fear.

Age makes little difference. Husky urchins of 8 or 9 who have never had a stitch to cover their nakedness are taken from their mothers' breasts, dressed in old clothes, provided with a gun and cartridge, and turned out to fight by the side of stunted men, white, copper-hued and solid, and they soon adapt themselves to the life at the camp or the barracks, and when it comes to fighting they seem to know no fear.

Fifth is the chief characteristics of the usual quarters for the soldiers. Of sanitary arrangements there are none worth mentioning.

The commissary department is primitive, consisting of a few women, food as best they can. Vivandieres are by no means creatures of comic opera. She is a woman in romance. She is usually small, ways dark and sinewy. In camp she carries great bags with cooking utensils and food, being expected to collect edibles on the way. In battle she fights with the men.

Navy non-descript.

The navy of the Republic consists of a few stray boats of different types. One was a pretty yacht, two or three were tugboats, and a small assortment of other craft.

That Colombia will submit calmly to the loss of her most profitable department, nobody who knows the country would imagine for a moment. For the Government give in without a struggle would involve its overthrow, with a strong probability of a further dismemberment of the Republic. On a scale of 100, the Republic is the only one in the world from sending troops to Boca del Toro or other points remote from the railroad and the partly dry canal.

Abdication Rumor Denied.
